Things for 2015*

#35 BJÖRK'S SWAN SONG

Iceland's pioneering princess of weird is the subject of a MoMA retrospective that's equal parts performance art, techno-apocalypse dreamscape and showcase for Biophilia, her education-disrupting app. But, really, everyone just wants to see that swan dress. From March 7 to June 7; 11 W. 53rd St., New York; moma.org.

A MEAL WORTH TRAVELING FOR

My best meal recently was at Yeni Lokanta-Bar in Istanbul's Beyoğlu neighborhood. The food, tradition-based "new Turkish"—crisp-cooked spicy sausage with borlotti bean puree; kadajifi, wrapped custard fritters with smoked-buffalo-milk ice cream and honey (below). Fashion Underfoot

Continuing its collaborations with leading fashion designers, The Rug Company is partnering with Rodarte, the label known for cerebral California-inspired clothing. Sister designers Kate and Laura Mulleavy have created four rugs that reference their native state while exploring abstract motifs of disintegration and fairy tales. From $123 a square foot; 88 Wooster St., New York; therugcompany.com.

Lucchese's Reboot

Founded more than 100 years ago by a Sicilian immigrant in Texas, the shoemaker Lucchese is best known for bringing fine Italian leathers to rodeo-ready kicks. However, the brand's latest men's and women's offerings are more Madison Avenue than Mission Alamo. Boots, from top: jodhpur, $1,095; Chelsea, $995; and chukka, $895; 4051 Westheimer Rd., Houston; lucchese.com.
