BOOT FOR THE HOME TEAM

There are more than 100 steps that go into making a custom-designed pair of Lucchese's boots, but the first step to actually owning a pair is making your way to the Texas-based brand's new Highland Village store. Designed by Lucchese co-owner Lyn Muse (also of Lyn Muse Interiors in Dallas), the shop has warm western touches like a ceiling made of hand-hewn white oak beams reclaimed from barns built in the 1800s and matching hardwood floors and display fixtures. It's chock-full of merchandise, including a footwear collection and equestrian-inspired bags; the store also stocks Lyle Lovett for Hamilton Shirts, Hudson Jeans and the largest selection of Clint Orms Silversmiths' one-of-a-kind, hand-engraved belt buckles, made in Ingram, Texas. "There are so many must-haves, it's difficult to choose just one," says retail director Jay Hamby. Boot prices range from $595 to $12,995, for a men's American alligator style.

More heart surgeries take place at the Texas Medical Center than anywhere else in the world. The hospital group even performed the first successful heart transplant in the country in 1968.

Leather Heads

Houston marks the spot for Tod's 10th U.S. boutique. The store, at the Galleria, showcases men's and women's collections and features walls made of mixed materials, like saddle-stitched leather boiseries, bright wood-coated panels and gray stone. "The idea was to make our clients feel at home," says CEO Diego Della Valle. "A house built in a classic Italian style with thousands of fine details is always rare to find."

THE LITTLE WHITE DRESS

Designer and Houston native Andrea G. Phillips might live in London, but she knows what Texans need to look (and feel) cool in high humidity. Fittingly, the founder of AG Phillips—sold at Neiman Marcus, Tootsie's and Elizabeth Anthony—has introduced a collection of little white frocks. "Incorporating white into your wardrobe makes you look chic when it's 100 degrees," Phillips says. She recommends completing the look with bold accessories in blue, like turquoise Jimmy Choo sandals. agphillips.com
